

Guardians of the Wild

It was a sunny Tuesday afternoon. Daisy and Ege were sitting in the school library. They had a big white poster board on the table. "We need to finish our Science project about the environment," Ege said. Daisy nodded and picked up a bright green marker. "You're right, Ege. We should start by choosing the best slogans to help our planet."

Soon, their friends Pelin and Kai joined them. Kai brought some colorful pens. "I think we should write 'Pick up litter!' at the top," Kai suggested. Pelin smiled and added, "And we shouldn't forget to say 'Save water!' because every drop is important for nature." They were talking about their ideas while they were organizing their materials.

Suddenly, Duru ran into the library. She looked very excited. "Guys, I had the most amazing dream last night!" she cried. She sat down next to Daisy. "I was dreaming about nature all night long. It felt so real! Do you want to hear what happened in my dream?" Everyone stopped working to listen to Duru's story.

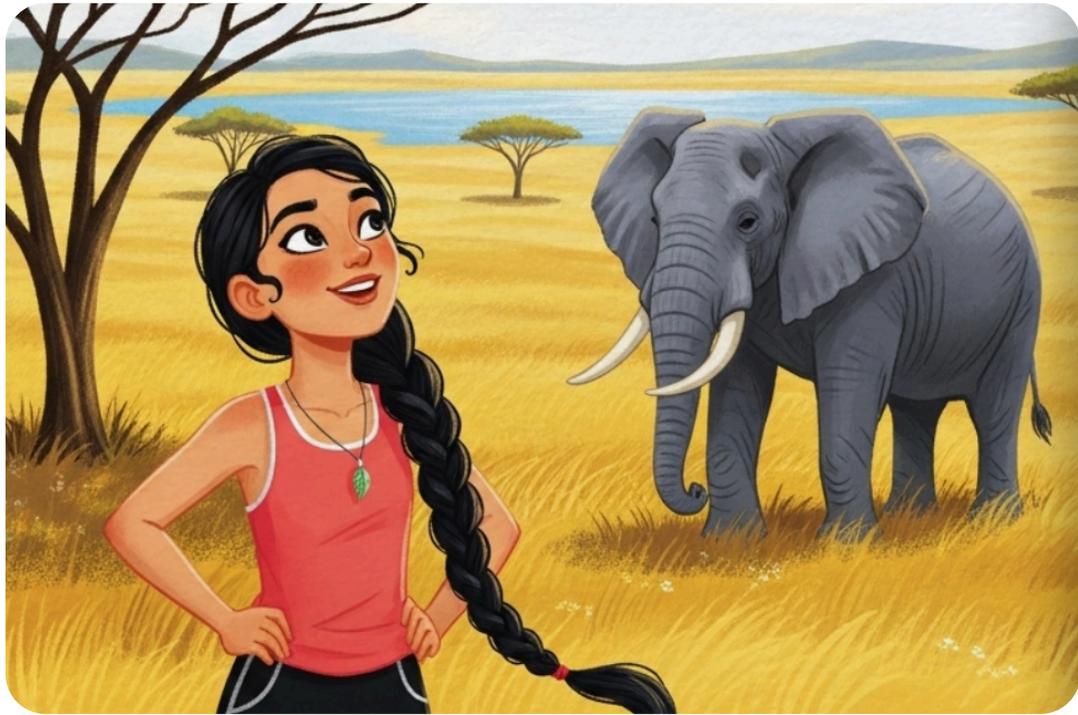

"In my dream, I was jogging in a tropical rainforest," Duru began. "The weather was boiling hot, and I could hear birds chirping everywhere. While I was running, I saw a monkey swinging from a giant tree! It was so fast and agile. I wanted to stay there forever, but then the scene changed."

"Suddenly, I was in the Arctic," Duru continued. "It was freezing cold! I could see huge icebergs in the distance. While I was walking on the thick ice, a massive whale jumped out of the water. It was a wonderful sight! I saw some penguins, too. They were sliding into the water very quickly."

"Then, the dream took me to the savanna," Duru said softly. "The sun was shining brightly on the golden grass. I saw a family of elephants. They were walking slowly toward a lake when I saw them. They looked so peaceful. I realized that these animals all need a safe home to live in."

Ege and Pelin looked at each other. Duru's dream made them think deeply. "We should protect the habitats of these animals," Ege said seriously. Pelin agreed, "Yes, we shouldn't destroy the forests or pollute the oceans. If we don't take action, these beautiful animals might become extinct, and they will no longer exist."

The group felt inspired. Kai started drawing a large, cute panda in the middle of the poster. "This will catch everyone's attention!" he said.

Daisy began writing the slogans they discussed earlier. "We should make it very colorful so that everyone wants to read it," Daisy added while she was coloring the letters.

Duru helped Ege with the final part of the project. "We should write 'Plant the seeds for a better future!' at the bottom," Duru suggested. Ege smiled and handed her a small plant he had brought. "We should also tell people to plant more trees to make the world greener," he said.

Finally, the poster was finished. Daisy and Pelin held it up for everyone to see. It was full of animals, trees, and important messages like "Use less energy!" and "Animals are all around us!" They were very proud. "Saving nature is all about working together," Pelin said. They were ready to show the world how to be guardians of the wild.
